Fund Manager Comments

As at 29 March 2019

Global stock markets continued to move higher in March with healthcare again a slight laggard on a relative basis. Within healthcare, the life sciences tools and pharmaceutical subsectors were the best performers. The Company's NAV increased by 3.5% in March which was ahead of the benchmark (Morgan Stanley Global Healthcare Net Total Return Index) that was up 2.9% for the month.

The broader market continues to be driven by macroeconomic issues with considerable investor debate about what the inversion of the US yield curve means for the global economy and interest rates over the next 18 months. Over the past three months, the market has recovered almost all of the losses from Q4 last year and so we would not be surprised to see a pause in the near term as we head into first quarter earnings season.

Within healthcare, the most important clinical news flow this month was around Alzheimer's. Biogen, and its partner Eisai, made an unexpected announcement that the Phase III trials for Aducanumab, a drug candidate for the treatment of Alzheimer's, had been stopped early as the trials were unlikely to show efficacy. This was a major disappointment and shares in Biogen and Eisai fell significantly. We do not own shares in either company as we had been rather sceptical on the mechanism of action of aducanumab – a number of drug candidates with a similar mechanism of action have failed over the past few years.

Alzheimer's remains a major unmet medical need and any new efficacious treatment would have major societal benefit and could have significant market potential. Towards the end of the month, Grifols announced data from its ongoing AMBAR study evaluating the efficacy of plasma exchange and long-term plasmapheresis with the infusion of human albumin with intravenous immunoglobulin in patients with mild and moderate Alzheimer's disease. These latest data suggest an improvement in patients with both mild and moderate forms of the disease. Grifols is a holding in the portfolio, and the shares appreciated on this news, but we await further data to be released later this year before we get too enthusiastic.

The other important clinical news flow during the month came from Novartis with the approval of Mayzent, the first oral drug for the treatment of secondary progressive multiple sclerosis (SPMS). Most multiple sclerosis patients are initially diagnosed with relapsing remitting multiple sclerosis (RRMS) but at least 80% of these patients progress to SPMS as their disease progresses and symptoms deteriorate over time. We think consensus expectations are too low for Mayzent and it appears that Novartis has another significant near-term earnings growth driver.

The most important business development news in the sector came on the very last day of the month, with AstraZeneca announcing a licensing agreement with Daiichi Sankyo for a new targeted oncology drug candidate, tratuzumab deruxtecan. To finance the transaction (there is a $1.35bn upfront payment) and strengthen its balance sheet, AstraZeneca issued $3.5bn of new equity, which caused a fall in the share price. The size of the equity issuance renewed existing concerns over near-term free cash flow and dividend coverage for the business but we think strengthening the balance sheet was a good move. Moreover, we think this deal strengthens AstraZeneca's oncology portfolio and could provide significant earnings upside in the mid and long-term.

We made a few changes to the portfolio during the month. With the race for the Democratic primary nomination beginning to pick up speed, we think managed care stocks will struggle to outperform, especially if the rhetoric around Medicare for all continues. As a result, we have sold our positions in UnitedHealth, Anthem and CVS Health. We also sold our position in Biomarin as the company has an important data read-out for its gene therapy programme during the second quarter that is a big binary event for the stock. We also sold our position in Photocure, a Norwegian biotechnology company.

We have added to our weighting in the pharmaceuticals subsector with new positions in Horizon Pharma, Pfizer and Otsuka. We have also added to our medical technology exposure with new positions in Baxter International, Koninklijke Philips and Teleflex.

We remain positive on large-cap healthcare companies as both absolute and relative valuations continue to be attractive. More importantly, we are identifying companies with proactive business strategies that are embracing and driving change within the industry that should give rise to sustainable underlying earnings growth.
