Fund Manager Comments

As at 29 November 2019

The broader equity markets were strong in November, with the healthcare sector outperforming. Within healthcare, there was strength across the board, with managed healthcare and biotechnology following on from the positive momentum we witnessed in October. Healthcare services also had a good month whereas healthcare equipment lagged. The Company's NAV increased by 7.8% in November, which was ahead of the benchmark (Morgan Stanley Global Healthcare Index) which was up 4.5% for the month.

The market strength in November carried a number of parallels with October with the ongoing optimism around constructive US/China trade talks the most obvious. With the next batch of American tariffs on Chinese goods due to begin on 15th December, the market is keen to understand if and how China responds to the US Bill signed by President Trump in support of the Hong Kong protesters.

In terms of healthcare specifically, November contained all of ingredients you would want to see if you are constructive, namely strong financial results, positive clinical data, faster-than-expected product approvals, M&A and encouraging capital market events. November also saw Elizabeth Warren continue to lose ground in the race for the Democratic presidential nomination, something we believe is positive for the healthcare sector, albeit not exclusively.

Starting with the financial results, it is not unreasonable to argue that Q3 2019 has been a strong one for the healthcare sector with results putting upward pressure on earnings forecasts for the sector globally. With regards positive clinical data, one of the most impactful readouts was from ChemoCentryx with positive top-line data for Avacopan for the treatment of vasculitis (inflamed blood vessels). Swiss pharmaceutical company Roche also presented positive overall survival data for Tecentriq in combination with Avastin for the treatment of liver cancer, a disease that has a high level of incidence in the Asia-Pacific region. Of the faster-than-expected product approvals referenced above, both Alnylam's Givosiran (for the treatment of rare blood disorder that increases the production of toxins) and Merck & Co's cancer drug Keytruda are worth highlighting. Keytruda received a couple of approvals globally in November but it is the China approval for metastatic squamous non-small cell lung cancer (NSCLC) that caught attention. The approval is the third for Keytruda in China, the first-line NSCLC setting in less than a year. There appears to be a real drive by the Chinese authorities to get best-in-class assets approved in a timely fashion, a potentially significant positive for companies who have innovative products. Price pressure will likely be an ongoing factor in China, especially for off-patent drugs, but the volume opportunities should more than compensate.

November was another busy month on the M&A front. In chronological order, on the 15th Qiagen announced it has begun a review of potential strategic alternatives after receiving several conditional, non-binding indications of interest for the acquisition of the Company. On the 18th, the Boards of Consort Medical and Recipharm announced they have each an agreement on the terms of a recommended cash offer by Recipharm for Consort. Last, but not least, on the 24th Novartis announced it has entered into an agreement and plan of merger with The Medicines Company to acquire the US-based biopharmaceutical business for $85 per share, valuing the company at approximately $9.7bn.

With regards capital market days, both NovoNordisk and Varian Medical Systems hosted events. NovoNordisk confirmed it is on track to meet its current long-term financial targets but declined the opportunity to update or extend those targets further. Rather, Novo took the opportunity to paint a picture out to 2025 that focussed on sustainability, innovation and commercial execution. Varian Medical Systems took a more direct approach, opting to target an 8-11% 2020-24 revenue CAGR, to expand operating margins 300bps by 2024 from the 2020 mid-point and to drive cash flow from operations to 65%-70% of EBITDA – long-range targets that were well received by the market.

Positive contributors to performance during November were Dexcom, Regeneron Pharmaceuticals and Humana. Dexcom produced a simply stunning set of Q3 financial results, with revenues growing 49% compared to Q3 2018. Further, the near-term competitive landscape looks more benign with Abbott Laboratories yet to get FDA approval for its second-generation glucose monitoring device, Libre 2.0. Regeneron Pharmaceuticals participated in the strong recovery in the biotechnology sub-sector, but also produced a solid set of Q3 2019 results coupled with positive pipeline updates out of its oncology franchise. Humana, in keeping with many of its managed care peers, produced strong Q3 financial results and offered comforting commentary around 2020 consensus earnings expectations.

The active positions that were the biggest detractors from performance were Fresenius Medical Care, Hill-Rom Holdings and UCB. With regards Fresenius Medical Care, there is concern in the market that 2020 guidance could disappoint, not necessarily due to fundamentals, which appear to be strong, but due to a number of one-offs and short-term headwinds. Hill-Rom presented strong YE2019 results but may have left some disappointed with conservative expectations for the first quarter of fiscal 2020. There was no material newsflow for UCB during the reporting period although it is worth noting a strong performance in October.

In the innovation portfolio Consort Medical performed well following the acquisition offer from Recipharm. The price offered is disappointing and the stock is currently trading above this level in the hope that a higher offer might be made for the company. Consolidation in contract manufacturing has been occurring at a rapid pace and at much higher prices than offered in this situation. No stock has been sold as of yet, with three months the window for a potentially higher offer from another party. Intelligent Ultrasound was the main laggard despite signing an agreement with Fujifilm SonoSite to develop a training solution for the point-of-care market.

We made a number of changes to the portfolio during the period. We have added to our European exposure through Fresenius Medical Care and Smith & Nephew, both of which are attractively valued given their growth prospects. We took profits in Dexcom and Edwards LifeSciences, both of which produced very strong Q3 results. We also exited our position in Otsuka Holdings, the fundamentals of which remain attractive but with an absence of material, near-term catalysts.

In the innovation portfolio we added positions in Penumbra and Tactile Systems and sold our position in Acceleron Pharma.

The positive momentum we saw for healthcare in October has spilled into November, positioning the sector nicely into the year-end. The sector is innovating, the fundamentals remain very strong and valuations remain attractive, despite the recent strength and positive re-rating. One should remain vigilant when it comes to US politics, especially around the topic of drug-pricing, but one should also note that those that add value to the system, whether it be with drugs, devices or services, can and should continue to be rewarded.
